HONGRONG, MAY 25TH, 1892.

THE piratical instruct has always been strong in the breasts of the maritime population of South China. Piracy flourished without check for several hundred years, and the rovers of the seas grew ever more audacious until in the middle of the sixteenth century they actually established a blockade of the port of Canton, and the Vicercy was compelled to seek the aid of the Portuguese, who had recently established a settlement at Macao. The Portuguese manued and armed a few vossels and succeeded not only in raising the blockade of Canton but also in temporarily clearing the coast of the pirates. In recognition of this service the Kwangtung Government allowed the occupation of the Macao peninsula by their deliverers; a cheap payment for a signal service. But piracy was only scotched not killed, and it woke into great activity again early in the present century. The Chinese were again delivered from this formidable post by the vessels of the British Navy. which on the termination of the first war with China were employed in policing the coasts tur being an increase of 3,830,000 oz. The outerprising Yankee leventor is (rays the Paper Record) again on the war path. This time he has designs upon the prosperity of the cigar trade. He has just discovered a method of making paper oigars which, we are gravely told, "ever knooked a connoissent into fits." As an article of commerce paper oigars were, until a few days ago, unknown; now, however, we may shortly expect to see them packed in artistically labelled boxes, and priced at from a halfpenny to twopence each. It appears that the Americans, to whom we owe the artificial egg, the wooden nutmeg, and the paste coffiebean, are producing paper cigars as salcable articles; and, what is more, are being backed up by the conneissours of the fragrant weed, who declare that the paper organ is superior to every other kind, including those made of the finest Havana tobacco. The cigars, we learn, are prepared from sheets of paper which have been sonked in tobneon juice, and then pressed and out into the requisite shape by means of specially constructed machinery.

The great opera-house, the pride of Montevideo, is (an Amoroian paper says) an enormous building. The oval-shaped auditorium is very handsome, capable of seating 4,000 people, with five tiers of boxes decorated in red, white, green and gold. The fourth circle is the casuela (gallery), reserved for ladies alone, after the peculiar fashion of all Spanish-American countries, as well as of old Spain. Not even an Archbishop or a Dictator could gain admission to the sacred precincts of the casuela; and night after night it is filled with the beauties of Montevideo, escorted thither by their husbands, fathers, and brothers; who leave them at the door and go away to spend the evening as they-like elsewhere, or take seats in the gentlemon's gallery above, but being dead-sure to return before the close of the performance to see the ladies safely home. Though men may not onter the charmed circle, no jealous rules can be vigorous enough to control the Southern propensity to flirtation, which, like murder, "will out," the more surely because of the mistaken notions of scelusion, handed down from their Moorish New Malwa ancestors, that environ aristocratic females.
